

THE GLOOMY AND MYSTERIOUS ZOO

I was the owner of a mysterious zoo, and all the animals I owned had one unusual supernatural power. However, last week there was a thunderstorm. During the thunderstorm, the gates accidentally opened, and two naughty animals escaped.

The first escaped animal was Karson, a chameleon. His supernatural power was to become invisible at will, blending seamlessly into his surroundings. The second was Galeno, a fox. His supernatural power was illusion, allowing him to create convincing visual and auditory distractions. As the owner of the zoo, I had to find them.

I announced to the other animals and set a plan to catch them. First, I gathered some of my wise and fierce animals. The bats knew the location of anyone, so I asked them to search for my dear Karson and Galeno. Then, I prepared some snacks to set traps. I created a trap using a large net that could be activated from a distance and placed their favorite snacks nearby. The net would be camouflaged to avoid alarming the escapees.

After my planning, my bats flew back to the zoo and confirmed Karson and Galeno's location. I set up a camera to observe their behavior, waiting for the right moment to spring the trap.

Karson found the snacks and told Galeno. They moved near the snacks, and I launched the trap. I brought them back to the zoo and asked, "How dare you two escape from the zoo?" They looked terrified and answered, "We've been here since we were born. We've never seen the real world!"

The zoo fell silent for a few seconds, and all the animals agreed with them. The thunderstorm started again.

The next day, it wasn't gloomy anymore. The sky was soft blue, and the sunshine was warm. My zoo wasn't a mysterious zoo anymore; it was ordinary, just like the other zoos. But I had the most special animals that others could visit, and my animals didn't want to escape anymore.